

"I've had to adapt to make myself more mature. I think the most challenging thing has been not being around everyone my own age."

"I felt that I'd struggle in a workplace environment as it's so different when compared to a college environment."

Entering the World of Work

So much of how employees are expected to conduct themselves in the workplace is implied.

Businesses tend to take it for granted that their employees will know to use manners, will understand office etiquette, will appreciate the need to check instructions and will be aware of suspected wrongdoing that needs reporting. That's because they're populated by people who haven't known any different for most of their lives. However, in order to get the best out of young people entering the workplace, we believe it's vital to open their eyes to the realities involved in the transition from full-time education to employment.

EML have developed a tailor-made programme for young employees. The training course is entitled "Entering the World of Work" designed to be delivered to school / university leavers and new apprentices as part of the induction process "Educating young people in this regard and developing their ability to adapt to working life will not only be to their own benefit, it is ultimately in the interests of the employer".

If you're interested in finding out more this workshop and how it could be tailored to your own workplace, please contact EML for a discussion in confidence and without obligation.
